

February 25, 1961

Professor James Harvey Young
Department of History
Emory University
Atlanta, Georgia 30322

Dear Harvey:

Your letter of February 22nd received this morning must have crossed in the mail with mine to you of February 19th. Obviously I am sorry to hear that you had a relapse with your influenza but delighted to hear that things are now back on track and soon will be able to do a little work on your article for Food Technology.

There probably is no reason for us to meet at the Atlanta airport as I suggested in my letter of February 19, and anyway, I would not want to tire you out by the usually unpleasant drive to any major city airport in mid to late afternoon. Hence, I will not plan on meeting you unless I hear to the contrary. Should you wish to reach me while I am in Athens, I will be staying at the Georgia Center for Continuing Education the night of March 2 as well as most of the 3rd, for that is where the nutrition seminar is being held that I am participating in. The telephone number of the Center for Continuing Education is: (404) 548-1311.

I note you have retained the legal papers as you wanted them at hand while doing your drafting, but whenever you want Bob Stitt, Esq. to put them into four or five pages of non-legalese comments, I am sure he will take care of this promptly when he gets the papers back from you.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely,

Fredrick J. Stare, M.D.
Professor of Nutrition, Emeritus

FJS:lh

cc: Robert Stitt, Esq.

EMORY UNIVERSITY
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30322

DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY

February 22, 1981

Professor Fredrick J. Stare
Department of Nutrition
School of Health
Harvard University
Boston

Dear Fred:

Our project has had to languish because fate has been unkind to me. I had a relapse of my throat trouble that took me again to the hospital. This time the causative organism was accurately hypothesized and thus discovered, for it takes a specially prepared medium to culture. It proved to be hemophilus influenzae. This rarely attacks adults, and then when something is awry with the immune system, as perhaps from my mild diabetes. Two cephalosporins knocked it out, but I have been some time building up my usual head of steam. Now I have my classes in shape again--poor, suffering students--and can begin to confront other tasks. The first on the schedule is our article. I have retained the legal papers, for I wanted them at hand while I was doing my drafting. I will work as expeditiously as I am able. And, of course, I am very sorry about the delay.

Sincerely,

Harvey

James Harvey Young